Architecture of Temples

Exploring Indian temples is a magical experience

Many of these sacred buildings were deliberately built at places rich in positive energy from the magnetic wave lines of the Earth.

Most temples feature one main idol, which has a copper plate called the Garbhagriha or Moolasthan underneath that absorbs and resonates this underground energy.

Therefore, it's considered good practice to have a bath or shower before entering a temple or at least washing your hands and feet to cleanse yourself of negative thoughts and evil influences.

It is also a practice to take off footwear before entering places of worship because they would bring in the dirt to an otherwise cleansed and sanctified environment.

It's widely believed in India that, going to the temple often helps in having a positive mind and gathering of positive energies, which in turn lead to healthier functioning.
